Chapter 1: Tracing Changes through a

Thousand Years

Tracing Changes through a Thousand Years

Changing Histories

The history of a place does not remain the same always but changes over a period of time. The changes in the rulers and dynasties, amalgamation of foreigners into the indegenious population, emergence of new social groups, development of trade and commerce etc. leads to politico-socio- economic changes in a country. Apart from these changes, innovations were also made in the field of science, technology, art and craft, transportation, map making etc.

The art of map making is known as cartography. A person who makes maps is known as a cartographer. In the twelfth century, a map made by an Arab geographer al-Idrisi had many defects. South India was shown in the place of North India and the island of Sri Lanka was shown to the north of the Indian subcontinent.

In the eigtheenth century, a Franch cartographer made a very accurate map of India in which he gave detailed information about the coastal areas of South India. Changes in science and technology also affected the art of map making.

In a map prepared by al-Idrisi, Sri Lanka was shown to the north of the Indian subcontinent

New and Old Terminologies

Various names and terms also changed with the passage of time. Some facts about the various names of India which emerged in the past are:

- The name 'Hindustan' used by Minhaj-i-Siraj in the thirteenth century only referred to the areas of Punjab, Haryana and the region between Rivers Ganga and Yamuna which were under the rule of the Delhi Sultanate. It did not include South India.

- In the early sixteenth century, Babur used the name 'Hindustan' to describe the geography, fauna and culture of the people of the subcontinent.

- The name 'Hindustan' described by Minhaj-i-Siraj and Babur did not have any political or national cannotation as today.

- Similarly, the term 'foreigner' also had different meanings in the past. Today anyone who is not an Indian is known as a foreigner. In the medieval period, any person who appeared in a village to which he did not belong was known as a foreigner. Any person outside his caste of religion was also considered to be a foreigner.

Babur used the word 'Hindustan' to describe the geography, fauna and culture of the people of the subcontinent

Sources and their Interpretation

- Historians study sources in order to construct the past. Coins, inscriptions and architecture are some important sources of the past.

- In the medieval period, many textual records were written which now form an important source of history.

- As paper became cheaper during this period, chronicals, religious texts, and judicial records came to be written.

- Hand written records are known as 'manuscripts'. Places where manuscripts and other documents are stored are known as archives.

- Before the invention of the printing press, the writers or scribes copied the manuscript by hand. In doing so, small changes were also made by them. These small changes grew into major changes and hence the copied texts sometimes became very different from the manuscripts. Therefore, at times there were many different written accounts of the same manuscript from which they were copied.

- Sometimes, the author himself revised the documents. For instance, Ziauddin Barani revised his chronicle which was different from the first one.

With the availability of paper at low prices, manuscripts began to be copied by the writers in the medieval period.
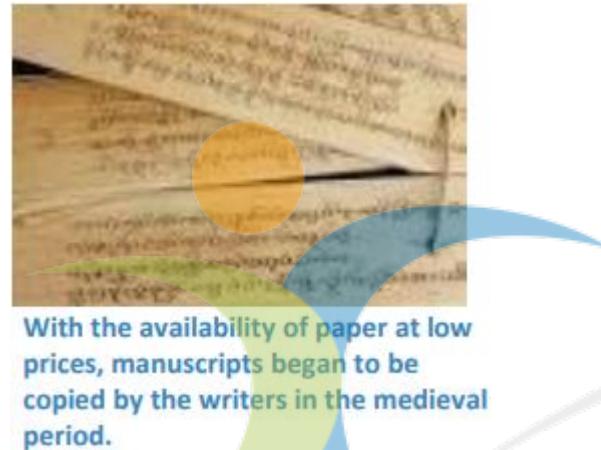

Emergence of New Social and Political Groups

In the medieval period from 700-1750 C.E., many developments occurred in various fields. In the scientific and technological fields the Persian wheel used for irrigation, the spinning wheel in weaving etc. New firearms began to be used. Many food crops such as potatoes, corn, chillies, tea and coffee made their way into India.

Likewise there were many developments in the social fields. The following political and social groups appeared during the medieval period:

- The Rajputs became an important community during this time. They were a group of warriors belonging to the Kshatriya clan.

- Rajputs were considered to be brave and chivalrous, having a great sense of loyalty.

- Many other groups like the Marathas, Jats, Ahoms and Kayasthas also emerged. The Kayasthas were a community of scribes and secretaries.

- Many forest dwellers became a part of the agricultural society. They began to cultivate land and paid taxes to the local ruler. Some possessed more land and cattle. This marked the emergence of various groups or jatis within the peasant communities. The position, wealth and status of the jatis differed from region to region.

- Jatis not only followed the rules which were formed within the community but also of the villages in which they lived.

Rajputs emerged as a prominent community in the early medieval period

Emergence of Regions and Kingdoms

- Some important kingdoms which became large empires and encompassed many diverse regions during this period were the Cholas, Khaljis, Tughluqs and Mughals.

- A prashsti praised Ghiyasuddin Balban, a king of the Delhi Sultanate. It was mentioned that he was a ruler of a vast empire which included territories from Afghanistan to Bengal and from the North to South of the Indian subcontinent. However, historians do not approve all the facts of this prashasti.

- Many large empires such as he Khaljis and later of the Mughals declined. After the decline of the Mughals in the eighteenth century many regional kingdoms emerged.

The Bhakti movement stressed on devotion to god without the interference of the brahmins

Changes in Religions

The medieval period witnessed many changes in the religious field.

Hinduism: Many changes took place in Hinduism. New deities began to be worshiped, new temples began to be constructed and the position of the Brahmins rose due to their knowledge of the Sanskrit texts. They were also patronised by the rulers.

The idea of Bhakti emerged according to which a devotee could worship and love his/her deity without the support of any Brahmins or rituals.

Islam: Islam appeared in the medieval period in India. Many rulers were the followers of Islam. Ulemas were the learned Muslims who had deep knowledge of the religion. Two major sects in Islam arose- one group was of the Sunnis who believed in the power of the earlier Khalifas and the other group was the Shias who considered Mohammad Ali as the legitimate heir of Prophet Mohammad.

Division of History into Periods

- History encompasses the periods of hunters-gatherers, peasant societies, regional and central kingdoms, religious-social-political and social changes.

- History has been divided into periods to help us understand the past. In the early modern period, the British historians divided Indian history into three periods, namely 'Hindu', 'Muslim' and the 'British' period.

- This division only took into consideration the religious changes in the Indian subcontinent and ignored the cultural and regional diversities of India.

- This division is not followed by the historians today. We usually divide Indian history into ancient, medieval and the modern period.
